As usual, I felt frustrated that I couldn't wish him at midnight because my parents were sleeping in the same room. The next morning, until 10:30, I couldn't get the chance, which made me think, "What the!!!" To top it off, the cake 🍰 was a disaster. I tried to keep things simple, but everything went wrong. However, when I finally had a video call with him after he returned from the temple, my mood soared 😍. After years, I finally posted on Instagram, accepted by a select group of friends 😊. Though most of my close ones didn't respond to other posts on mine, those who knew about our relationship sent their congratulations, making me feel incredible in this post. I've always been the one to shower him with birthday wishes, posting stories for him on the 9th of every month 😂. Starting a week ago, I began wishing him in advance 🤔. On his birthday, I kept saying, "Happy birthday, da paiya." Even he admitted that only I could "torture" him with constant wishes 😂.

In the evening, I felt sad that I couldn't be with him, a little down, knowing he was probably busy with other well-wishers. But after eight, he texted me, saying he had slept 😞, and we chatted until 11:30, even though my parents were still around 😊. We talked a lot; he told me about everyone who wished him and discussed Vibi and Divya. Eventually, the conversation drifted, and I left without saying goodbye . What made this day special was that, despite feeling frustrated about not wishing him first and missing him, he understood my feelings without me having to say anything and he missed me 😘. Pradee always surprises me with his simple gestures; he's truly sweet heart 🧡. Once again, happy birthday, da paiyaaa... love you so much! ❤️💕❤️
